Hi Bill,

Just a short letter this time.

Dating in the 21st Century is hard enough, and now Covid has been thrown into the mix. One thing is people are not willing to talk to strangers. The strangers who have talked to me in public always make the worst comments. And in this age people are not getting married as early. This makes finding a relationship more difficult since everyone my age seems more interested in hook-ups than relationships. Not that I ever went out before, but now that we are forced to stay home, I really didn't think I'd meet anyone. Thank goodness for dating apps that aren't full of weirdos. Except you still don't know people's intentions. And some men think it's okay to be completely inappropriate and then don't understand why they get rejected. I know back in your dating days, you had your own stew of problems, but sometimes I wish for the calling cards and dance cards. It seems so much more straightforward. Anyways, just some of my thoughts.

Love

Samantha
